EDITORIAL

The second number of the National Law School Journal is being published in a revised format with a rich variety of articles and notes by scholars from India and abroad. We have in this issue a section on Comparative Law which carries over a dozen contributions from law teachers and lawyers from as many countries in Asia, Europe and the United States. This is indicative of the popularity of the NLSJ in other countries and of the desire of the National Law School to develop comparative law scholarship in India under the aegis of the Institute of Comparative Law in the University.

With every new issue of the Journal, the Editorial Board is trying out different ways to make it useful and instructive to the readers. We solicit suggestions and comments for making the publication still more useful to the legal community in general and the academic world in particular.
