EDITORIAL

Keeping the regularity of the publication and enriching the variety of its contents, we come before the readers with the third number of National Law School Journal. It shall be the endeavour of every member of the National Law School Family and more particularly members of the Editorial Board to continue our efforts in improving the quality and appeal of our publications including the Journal.

The University, set up by the Bar Council of India as a centre for excellence in legal education and research, is moving out of the Central College Campus in the near future. A beautiful campus is fast coming up in the Nagarbhavi area on the southern part of Bangalore and the NLSIU will be shifted to its own premises by the end of this year.

Our first batch of graduate and post-graduate students will be passing out of the University in the next couple of years. They have been trained extensively on legal research and writing employing multi-disciplinary approaches and perspectives. Some of their best contributions will selectively appear in the future issues of the Journal which hopefully will be interesting and instructive reading to academics and practitioners alike. It will also give an idea of the intellectual equipment that NLSIU graduates have come to acquire in its pursuit for academic and professional excellence. We do hope that everyone associated with the NLSIU experiment can feel proud of the accomplishments of the institution in this short period.
